Adobe Photoshop is the world's most popular digital imaging software, and it's the most common type of photo editing software used by amateur photographers and enthusiasts. Since Photoshop is a complex program, it can also be very costly to purchase, but the free version, Photoshop Elements, is great for beginners and for those who just want to experiment with basic editing techniques before they move on to more advanced Photoshop. Photoshop allows you to retouch photos and add special effects.

It's the best way to add dimension and play around with your digital photos. The following list shows you the best and most essential features of Photoshop. Basic Editing Functions What is the best program for basic editing? Adobe Photoshop. Although Photoshop Elements is a good alternative, the best Photoshop alternative for basic editing is the Lightroom. It's an alternative to Adobe Photoshop. If you're a beginner, it will be a much less intimidating program to learn. There are so many features and it's so simple to use. Let's take a look at some of the basic editing functions you can do with both the Lightroom and Photoshop. Removing Red Eye: There are several different ways to remove eye boogers. If you have a DSLR camera, you can use the Magic Wand tool to select the eye, and press Delete. If you have a camera that has a large red eye correction setting, the Auto-Red Eye feature works great. If you have a camera that doesn't have a red eye correction setting, you can use some Photoshop smart objects to remove the eye. If the eye color matches the color of the background, you will have a very easy time removing the eye. Create a new document. Delete the background. Place the eye on a new layer, and press P on your keyboard. Click Fill, and choose Paint Bucket. Press X and choose your white color. Press X and choose Soft Round. Press A to select the eye. Press Alt+delete. Press Delete to remove the eye. When you remove the eye, if it's clear that it was easy to remove, because it doesn't look like the eye anymore. Another way to remove eye boogers is to create a new layer. Choose the Rectangle tool. Select the eye, and move it to a new layer. Crop out the eye. You can also use the free Eye Retouch tool from Eye Emmet to get rid of the red eye. Rem 05a79cecff

Q: Why is my `array.getClass() == ArrayList.class`? I'm running into some strange behavior of Java. I run a piece of code which looks like this: `Object o = new ArrayList().getClass(); System.out.println(o);` And I get this output: `class [Ljava.lang.Object;` As you can see, the `ArrayList` is getting casted as an `Object`. And it's giving me this output: `[Ljava.lang.Object;` What is going on here? I'm hoping it's not related to my IDE. I'm running Eclipse. If this isn't about an IDE bug, then I can see that there is obviously something going on behind the scenes. A: `System.out.println(o);` is equivalent to `System.out.println(o.getClass());`. The `ArrayList.class` is not visible as a method of `ArrayList`. One way to get the `ArrayList`'s declared type is to use `java.lang.reflect.Array.uncheckedGetClass(): java.lang.reflect.Array.uncheckedGetClass(new ArrayList().getClass())` I'm not entirely sure why it is returning `[Ljava.lang.Object;`. It's probably related to `ArrayList`'s implementation of `hashCode` and `equals`. If you see a declaration of a local `ArrayList`, then that might help. A: As @Hovercraft mentioned, is about autoboxing. If you don't want this occur then you have two options: use `Object` as the generic type parameter to `ArrayList` cast the `o` returned by `getClass()` to `ArrayList`, and not to `Object` Q: SQL - General Availability/Availability Percentage Error I am working on a SQL Server Stored procedure, and I am experiencing an issue on a certain `SELECT` statement that I'm wondering if someone can help out with. I am trying to return a list of databases with all the databases that are currently `GA/AVAILABLE`, and a percentage of the databases that are currently unavailable. Here's the SQL that I wrote so far: `declare @sql varchar(max), @dbname varchar(max); --define variables for selecting databases set @sql ='select name,percentage`

SpaceX founder Elon Musk said Monday that the next step in the company's efforts to expand human space travel is to create a way to get that process to a level of safety and reliability that will allow people to live and work in space. "We are in the early days of the colonisation of space. The first successful manned mission is going to require some tremendous breakthroughs," he said on stage at the South by Southwest (SXSW) festival in Austin, Texas. "We have to prove that humanity is able to live in space long-term and that it's worth it." Now Playing: According to SpaceX, the first successful manned mission will require a new "economic model for long-duration crewed space flight." That means making a spaceship that can stay docked to a space station for weeks or months at a time, where astronauts will be performing scientific research or conducting experiments. "Eventually we want to get the possibility of people working in space, living in space," Musk said. "Even if we're still going to the moon or Mars, at least we're living somewhere." Cameron Padgett/CNET Musk's comments came during his keynote speech, which at times resembled a mission briefing. He also did a series of demos, often on large video screens. He showed off two vehicles: One is designed to be a reusable spaceship for manned missions to space, which he calls the "Starship". The other is a high-powered rocket known as the "Big Falcon Rocket," or BFR, that will one day be able to launch hundreds of people to space. First flight scheduled for 2020 The BFR rockets, which will be capable of carrying payloads up to 100,000 pounds, are designed to take off and land vertically, and be reused multiple times. Like the Dragon capsule, it will also be reusable. Big Falcon Rocket in flight. SpaceX Musk promised it would be the most fuel-efficient rocket ever, and is a key part of an effort to reduce the cost of spaceflight. For example, he's planning to reuse the BFR's first stage, which will use Raptor engine, the same technology that powers the Space X rocket the Falcon 9. Later this year, SpaceX plans to launch its first unmanned mission to space. It will be the most powerful rocket ever built, and will carry more than 62 million pounds of cargo and satellites into orbit.
